A baby girl, just about able to toddle, caught the eye of Herman Fastenau. ticket seller at the Seventy-second street station on the Second avenue elevated last night. He had not noticed her pass through the gates and couldn't determine whether she was accompanied.

When a train pulled in, south bound, the youngster tried to board it but was swept aside by the hurrying men and women and saw the gate close in front of her. She was so little that the guard could not see her and apparently she was overlooked by affy who might have been with her.

As she saw the train moving away she began to cry and sought the ticke seller for sympathy. He summoned Policeman Langan, who started with her to the East Sixty-seventh street

As they walked down Second avenue the big policeman felt a little tug at his elbow and, looking down, he saw his charge pouting and pointing a tiny finger at a tray of buns and cakes in the window of a bake shop. They went in and the child, indicating the sort of cookle she liked best, the policeman invested in five cents' worth.

At the station she was entered as "Girl about two years old, light hair, blue eyes, fair complexion, tan dress, no hat and no marks of identification. A big glass of milk when placed before her seemed to fill a want, and she thanked the policemen with a childish
